Jewish Population in the United States, 1976

THE ESTIMATE of the United States "Jewish population" for 1976 is 5,845,000. Major changes from the previous estimate (AJYB, 1976 [Vol. 76], p. 229) were reported by several Florida communities.

The estimate is a composite of several sources: (1) for the New York City area, the 1970 National Jewish Population Study; (2) for other member communities of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds (CJFWF), responses to a direct inquiry; (3) for non-CJF members (usually smaller cities), previous information from National United Jewish Appeal records. The procedure for (3) is somewhat dated, and individual estimates are therefore less reliable than those for communities (1) and (2). A study is currently in preparation to reach each of these communities for updated estimates in 1977.

State totals are the sum of individual community estimates, adjusted for duplications in areas where a community spreads over state boundaries. Estimates for communities of under 100 Jewish population (excluded from the listing in Table 3) are included here.

There is a slight overstatement of the proportions between the general population figures and the Jewish population estimates in Table 1 and 2, since the former are for July 1, 1975, and the latter for 1976.

"Jewish Population," as used here, gives an estimate of the number of individuals in households in which one or more Jews reside. It, therefore, includes non-Jews living in such households as a result of intermarriage, conversion, etc. (AJYB, 1974-75 [Vol. 75], pp. 296-97).
