Jewish Population in the United States, 1977

THE ESTIMATE of the United States “Jewish population”* for 1977 was 5,776,000. The decrease of 60,000 from the previous year’s estimate (AJYB, 1977 [Vol. 77], p. 229) is almost entirely accounted for by the elimination of “double counting” involving Washington, D.C. and its two suburban areas, located respectively in Virginia and in Maryland. As a consequence, state totals for the latter two also show a drop from the previous year’s levels.

The major source for changes in community estimates in Table 3 are the local Jewish federations, which responded to a questionnaire. Cities marked with an asterisk have provided such estimates either currently, or in the recent past. New York City is continued at the level derived from the 1970 National Jewish Population Study (NJPS). Estimates from communities where no federation exists were generally derived from earlier estimates, and therefore are subject to a greater margin of error. This is particularly so in areas where sharp changes in Jewish population levels occurred, as, for example, Florida and California.

The state totals are the sum of the individual community estimates, adjusted for duplication in areas where a community extends across state boundaries. Also included are communities with Jewish population under 100 (not shown in Table 3). There is a slight overstatement of the proportion of Jewish population in the general population, since the former is for the first half of 1977 and the latter is as of July 1, 1976.

*Represents the number of individuals in households in which one or more Jews reside, and therefore includes non-Jews living in such households as a result of intermarriage, etc. For a discussion of this, see AJYB, 1974–75 (Vol. 75), pp. 296–97.
