Jewish Population in the United States, 1979

THE ESTIMATE of the United States "Jewish Population"* for 1979 is 5,860,900, a modest increase over the previous year's figure of 5,780,960. The South and West comprise 30.2 per cent of the total, as compared to 29.1 in 1978 and 27.8 in 1977. Twenty-three of the 30 states in these regions reported increases in 1979; those reporting significant gains included Arizona, California, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, and Hawaii. The Northeast and Northcentral states represent 69.8 per cent of the total Jewish population, as compared to 70.9 and 72.2 in 1978 and 1977, respectively. Of the 21 states (including the District of Columbia) in these regions, 10 noted population increases. It is important to bear in mind that in situations of shifting population, there is a tendency for growing communities to report changes faster than communities which are experiencing population loss.

Two factors combine to make the total estimate problematic. The extent of the shift to the "sun-belt" states may not yet be fully reported. On the other hand, the New York City area estimate is, in all likelihood, overstated. The figure of 1,228,000 for the city proper is based on the 1970 National Jewish Population Study. Unofficial estimates by the New York Department of City Planning show a 13.5 per cent drop in the city's white population between 1970 and 1977. An extrapolation of this figure to 1979 could reduce the Jewish population figure for New York City to around 1,000,000. The extent to which Jews have shifted their residences to New York City's suburbs and to areas outside Greater New York is unknown. The New York Federation of Jewish Philanthropies is hoping to sponsor a study which will shed light on this manner.

The community estimates listed in Table 3 are provided primarily by local Jewish federations. The estimates cover the fund-raising and service areas of community federations, which generally include the city itself and the more densely populated surrounding areas. This year information on the geographic areas covered by estimates was requested. Several communities previously listed separately are now included in the estimates of nearby larger cities. Details are found in Table 3.

*Represents the number of individuals in households in which one or more Jews reside, and therefore includes non-Jews living in such households as a result of intermarriage, etc. For a discussion of this, see AJYB, 1974-75, Vol. 75, pp. 296-297.

Estimates for non-federated communities are based on returned questionnaires from local synagogues. An asterisk precedes those cities which submitted estimates in either 1978 or 1979.

National, regional, and state totals are derived by summing the local estimates. The accuracy of these estimates depends on the methods used in obtaining them. Some communities have recently completed population studies, while others employ lists of "known" Jews, taking into consideration the unknown factor. State totals, reported in Table 1, exclude duplicate listings and out-of-state figures where a community extends across state boundaries. Cities with less than 100 Jews (not shown in Table 3) are also included.
