Jewish Population in the United States, 1984

THE JEWISH POPULATION in the United States in 1984 is estimated to be 5.817 million.

While the 1984 figure is approximately 88,000 more than the estimate given for 1983, this does not reflect the operation of any intrinsic demographic factors leading to population increase. (For data supporting the view that these factors have a negative rather than a positive impact on population growth, see the article by Gary A. Tobin and Alvin Chenkin elsewhere in this volume.) Rather, an explanation is to be found in the procedures of population reporting. There has been a continuing shift of Jewish population to the Sunbelt region, and as part of this process higher numbers have been reported by receiving communities before losses recorded by communities of origin. The preparation of Jewish population estimates in individual communities is a discontinuous process, and this often leads to a situation in which a change in numbers is divorced from a population shift currently taking place. (New York City's estimate, for example, has been changed upward by 7,700, but this is simply a recomputation of figures derived from a 1981 population study.)

In almost every instance local estimates refer to "Jewish households," i.e., households in which one or more Jews reside. As a consequence, non-Jews are included in the count, their percentage of the total being estimated (based on the 1970 National Jewish Population Study and a number of current studies) as between six and seven per cent. Assuming this proportion, the number of individuals in "Jewish households" who identify themselves as Jewish in 1984 would be between 5.410 and 5.468 million.

The state and regional totals shown in Table 1 and Table 2 are derived by summing individual community estimates, shown in Table 3, and then making three adjustments. First, communities of less than 100 are added. Second, duplications within states are eliminated. Third, communities falling within two or more states (e.g., Washington, D.C. and Kansas City, Missouri) are distributed accordingly.

The trend toward geographical redistribution of the Jewish population continues. While the proportions of Jews residing in the Northeast and North Central regions still add up to nearly two-thirds of the national total, there is some decline from the proportions registered in 1983. The South, in contrast, shows a gain of one percentage point.

In 1984 nine states have Jewish proportions exceeding the national average of 2.5 per cent, with three states—Florida, New Jersey, and New York—exceeding five per cent. At the other end of the spectrum, there are 20 states with Jewish proportions of less than one half of one per cent.
