

Demographic Data

JEWISH POPULATION IN THE UNITED STATES, 1959

THE current estimate of the Jewish population of the United States is 5,367,000. This estimate is based upon the data shown in Table 1, adjusted further for Jewish populations in communities with fewer than 100 Jews, as well as an estimate for the Jewish population in areas not covered through the methods described below.

The community estimates were derived as follows: 1. A questionnaire was submitted to the member communities of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds. Of these member communities, 178 submitted estimates—154 in 1959 and 24 in 1958. 2. The files of UJA were reviewed for all other communities. 3. The estimates for New York City and its boroughs were maintained at the previous year's level, a projection from a sample study undertaken in 1952 by the Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York. For suburban communities within the greater New York area—Westchester, Nassau, Suffolk, and Bergen counties—replies to a special questionnaire in 1957 gave the number of Jewish households, which the author multiplied by 3.5 to obtain an estimate of individuals.

Table 2 gives the general and the Jewish populations for each state, including Alaska and Hawaii for the first time.

If the results of a new population study by the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of New York had been followed, the figures for New York City, New York State, and the total American Jewish populations would have been higher by several hundreds of thousands. The asterisked note to Table 1 gives further information.

* After including the data for New York City proper and the communities in the surrounding counties of Westchester, Nassau, and Suffolk, the author was generously allowed to see the results of a special study, directed by C. Morris Horowitz and sponsored by the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of New York. The basic method employed was the "Yom Kippur" technique (AJYB, 1958 [Vol. 59], p. 3, n. 2). The results of that study yielded a much higher figure than the data in this table. Our data were based upon two sources: 1. for New York City, projections from an area sample study conducted in 1952 by the Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York, and 2. for the individual communities in Westchester, Nassau, and Suffolk counties, from questionnaires to individual community leaders in 1957 which produced estimates of the number of households. The author multiplied these by 3.5 to obtain an estimate of individuals.

Because there was not time to assess the factors entering into the differences between the two sets of data, the previous estimates were kept in the table. The table below shows the magnitude of these differences. Since the results of the federation study of the three counties outside of New York cover larger political subdivisions than the community estimates shown in Table 1, the comparison is made by grouping the individual communities under the appropriate counties.

^a Since the population estimates for the individual states were not issued by the Census Bureau in time for inclusion in this table, the figures shown are for July 1, 1958. To a very slight extent, therefore, the percentages in the third column are overstated. The total United States population figure for September 1, 1959, is used, and includes Hawaii and Alaska. Excluded from the total are members of the armed forces outside the 50 states. Sources: State estimates, *Provisional Estimate of the Population of States . . .
